

Newton and NASA

In the beginning there was light...

Ancient civilisations understood how vital light was for their survival. They placed great importance on the sun for warmth, light and food.

Leap forward to 1672 when Isaac Newton was the first to understand visible light. By refracting white light through a prism he was able to reveal the colours of the rainbow.

Each colour has it's own unique wavelength which plays a vital role in creating and sustaining life. There are also wavelengths of invisible light which are just as important.

Light penetrates beneath the skin's surface to stimulate cell rejuvenation and collagen production.

Now take a Quantum leap forward to 1996 when during the space program, NASA conducted experiments with red light LEDs for growing plants in space. LEDs are 10 times brighter than the sun so they sped up plant cell metabolism and photosynthesis.

They also discovered that it was very effective for cell and tissue growth in humans. Wounds heal very slowly in space and that's a big problem for astronauts. For example, a paper cut on Earth will heal in a couple of days. In space you could complete your mission and return home before your cut has fully healed. Red Light Therapy speeds the healing process by 200%. They also discovered the effect it has on the skin for collagen production and anti aging.

We are now very fortunate to have red light technology NASA created for use in beauty and medical clinics.
